An internationally bestselling exploration of womanhood, trauma and healing

All her life, Helen Knott has been surrounded by strong women in her Indigenous community. But when her mother and grandmother died within six months of each other, she had to draw upon lessons from her ancestors and the land to find her own inner power and refashion her future.

A deeply inspiring meditation on how we repair ourselves in the face of tragedy and injustice; on what it is to be a woman – and become a matriarch.

Demystifying the science behind the statistics, including scrutiny of emerging AI and Big Data

Today, data is so plentiful and our reliance on computer analysis and AI so entrenched that we spend little time distinguishing between good, meaningful deductions and complete rubbish – sometimes with damaging outcomes.

Not only do researchers and even bad actors use statistical data to fool us, we fool ourselves. In this fully updated edition of his acclaimed and accessible book, economics expert Gary Smith demonstrates the tricks and traps we so often fall into, and how to avoid them.

A vet's life with a difference: creatures great and small in the diverse South Atlantic islands

The role of resident vet in the remote British Overseas Territories of the Falklands, St Helena, Tristan da Cunha and Ascension encompasses the complexities of caring for the world's oldest land animal – a 200-year-old giant tortoise – and MoD mascots at the Falklands airbase; and rescuing animals in extraordinarily varied and rugged landscapes.

Witty, warm, full of astounding fauna and people, these tales of island vetting are perfect for animal lovers, adventurers and armchair travellers alike.

A killer. A saint. A town full of whispers

When an English expat is brutally murdered, his charred corpse left on a Loire Valley hillside, the police turn to juge d'instruction Matthieu Lombard to find the perpetrator.

But rather than towards an arrest, each clue he uncovers seems to point in one, unexpected direction – Joan of Arc. Is the answer to the murder hiding in the barroom gossip of the Lion d'Or? Or in another century altogether?

The new instalment in the acclaimed crime series by bestselling author

A decapitated body washes up on the banks of the River Loire in the ancient city of Tours – the victim friendless and unclaimed. After being reluctantly brought in to lead the investigation, juge d'instruction Matthieu Lombard is drawn into another world: of eco-terrorism, bio-medical research, French aristocracy and the violent, forgotten underbelly of society.

Can the brutal murder of a lonely man be part of a plan to save the planet? Or are good intentions hiding darker motives more cynical and deadly?

Classic illustrations of our national character and foibles by the celebrated cartoonist

A fondness for laughing at our own anecdotes. An assertion of the importance of tea. A keen interest in the weather. The British haven't changed much since the 1930s, when Pont's first witty and hilarious observations on the national character appeared in Punch magazine. While Pont captures a distinct moment in British inter-war history, his observations of character are timeless.

Charming, idiosyncratic and – above all – wonderfully funny, this unforgettable collection will bring Pont's extraordinary talent to a new generation of fans.
